Jeff Teague, the designer who set up the industrial design department at the Academy of Art College in San Francisco, has gone free-lance. He had been commuting from his home near Los Angeles and spending weekdays in the Bay area. After two years, it got to be too much. Teague, son of the late Dick Teague, the former American Motors design vice president, says, 'Free-lance assignments have been flooding in, totally unsolicited.' He's doing designs, sketches and clay models out of his home. Teague Design Inc. customers include Kia, Hyundai and an unnamed Detroit manufacturer.
